MALAGA — Depending upon your viewpoint, she might be a penniless pauper or the wealthiest woman you can name.

With no worldly possessions except the clothes she wears, carrying in her pockets the bare essentials — a toothbrush and comb, paper and pen — Peace Pilgrim walks until she's given shelter and fasts until she's given food.

But she certainly doesn't think of herself as poor.

"I think of myself as free from enslaving things — unnecessary possessions and meaningless activities," she says, smiling, as she tucks a wisp of her silvery hair into her pony tail.

Dressed in her uniform of navy-blue shirt, pants, sneakers and navy-blue tunic, with the words "Peace Pilgrim" on the front and "25,000 miles for peace" on the back, she spoke to a small group of people at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Jay Dinshah here Sunday.

She also expects to visit Newfield, Atlantic City and Absecon later this week.
