

Ageless, nameless and peripat

Photos by James Skovmand

of others. She walks to town, state to state and offering her services in return receiving a place and food to eat.

She wears a faded sailcloth tunic with which she carries her newspaper clippings and a few worldly goods. They are children's sneakers which she has worn more than she remembers.

"They go about 1,500 miles the pair," she says. "How much mileage? I think it's 25,000."

Peace Pilgrim refuses to give her age or anything about her own personal background, saying that it's not important. She lives simply, eating fresh fruits and vegetables.